EXHIBITION FINAL REPORT

Exhibition title: ᐱᑦᓴᓂᑦ ᑕᒪᐃᓂᑦ ᓄᐱᑐᐃᓂᑦ
Among All These Tundras

Exhibition dates: September 4 – October 27, 2018
Opening: Saturday, September 8th, 3:00 - 5:00 pm

Among All These Tundras, a title taken from the poem 'My Home Is in My Heart' by famed Sámi writer Nils-Aslak Valkeapää, features contemporary art by Indigenous artists from around the circumpolar world. Together, their works politically and poetically express current Arctic concerns towards land, language, sovereignty and resurgence. Artists from throughout the circumpolar north share kinship with each other and their ancestors, love for their homelands, and respect for the land and its inhabitants. Yet they also share histories of colonialism and experience its ongoing legacies and are united in their desire to protect northern ecologies, languages, peoples and knowledge from the nefarious effects of climate change, encroaching industry and competition. These resistance efforts do not merely express, they give shape to a collective ecology of care, a "decolonial love" (in the words of Leanne Simpson and others) that is both generous and generative. These works invite viewers to contemplate relationships between textual and embodied Indigenous knowledges, innovation and sustainability, humour and resilience, and our collective responsibility to northern life and land.

Saturday, September 8, 3:00 – 5:00 pm

In Alaskan arctic communities the Iñupiaq word siku names both ice and methamphetamine. For her two-part performance Warden addresses both senses of the word, considering the social and personal consequences of colonization and means of resistance through language revitalization.

The Encounter Between Nation States and Indigenous Peoples, Ånde Somby
(Associate Professor in the Faculty of Law, University of Tromsø)

How many legal shapes can the encounter between a nation state and an Indigenous people take? This presentation traces the various approaches taken when a nation state has established its presence in a territory already populated. Does the state simply use the people already living there as resources along with the riches that the territories offer? For example, as slaves? Or do they just cleanse the territories of these people? Do they criminalize the people or tolerate their presence until worthier interests emerge? Or are the people educated and integrated? Does the state consult them? Give them veto power? Or even the right to propose initiatives themselves? We will follow this line of inquiry with examples from history as well as from today's reality to analyze the encounter between nation states and Indigenous peoples.

CONCERT

Saturday, September 15, 6:00 pm – 9:00 pm

The animals inside the man and the man outside the animals
Are we simply humans? Or are there animals inside of us? Plants? Landscapes?

This is the question underlying Ånde Somby's performance, during which he "yoik-impersonates" birds, insects and animals. Inspired by the pre-Christian Sámi concept of transformation—that a human could change into an animal and back again—Somby considers our current moment when many birds and animals' lives are on the line. How would they comment, for example, on pollution?

With opening performance of Inuit throat singing by Nina Segalowitz and Lydia Etok

CONVERSATION

Wednesday, October 3, 5:30 pm

Mobilizing 'Nipivut' (Our Voice), Gabriel Uqaituk and Annie Pisuktie
Gabriel Uqaituk and Annie Pisuktie of Nipivut, Montreal's first Inuktitut radio show, discuss Inuit-led radio as a way of understanding urban Inuit experience and identity. Meaning 'Our voice' in Inuktitut, Nipivut has been on-air since 2015 and is the only campus community radio show in the country broadcast predominately in Inuktitut. Attentive to the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's calls (no. 84–86) for more Indigenous language programming across Canadian media, the show is a much needed media outlet focused on urban Inuit affairs produced for and by Inuit. On this panel, the contributors reflect on their work on the show, Nipivut's role in community development and the history of Inuit community radio broadcasting.
